

Relentlessly Pursue
Intergenerational & Cultural

Unity

"We need to relentlessly pursue creating a community where We, as the Church would be united amidst our diversity while cultivating a culture that bridges generational gaps, theological divides, cultural approaches."

As we discern our church's action plan in creating and cultivating this area, let's consider these starter questions to provide a more defined framework, which can include collaborating with a working group in our church.

STARTER QUESTIONS

1. Young people have tired of a divisive world. How can we as the church (both local and the big "C" church) be seen more united than divided when it comes to navigating the cultural issues of our day?
2. What do the adult-youth relationships look like in our church and how are we fostering opportunities for generations to learn and build relationships together?
3. Which ministries (if any) reflect our congregation and by extension our neighbourhood? How are we consciously adapt our structure, systems or messaging to engage the cultural context we minister within?

4. What does our church's relationship look like with other churches in the community and how are we building bridges to do collective missional work with others in our local area?

5. Where are the greatest connection points for kids and youth with other parts of our church?

6. Which parts of our church's programming, theology or practises do our kids/youth have the most difficulty connecting with? What factors/obstacles influence that connection? How are we making space to navigate these areas?
